10 Vandyck, Sir A.

Flemish School

Portrait

Anthony Vandyck, the friend and pupil of Rubens, is justly termed the "Prince of Portrait Painters." In this department he is allowed to have but one superior—Titian. Vandyck was born at Antwerp in 1599, and died in London in 1641. The portrait before us is evidently that of some scholar and divine of the seventeenth century.

The Dentist

Thomas Wyck was born at Harlem in 1616. He excelled in painting small figures, shipping, the interiors of chemists' laboratories, etc. "His pictures are well composed, his coloring warm and transparent, and his pencil bold and free." He died in 1686.

13 Reni, Guido (1575-1642)

Bolognese School

Egyptian Magdalene

Guido Reni, the greatest of the scholars of the Caracci, was born at Bologna in 1575. "His earlier pictures display a striving after the grand and terrible, with a powerful effect of light and shadow, similar to that observed in the works of Caravaggio; but his later style, by which he is best known, is remarkable for its sweetness and tenderness. His heads show the influence of a careful study of the antique." Guido died in 1642.

(Owned by Ladies' Museum Association)

Norton Bush was born in Rochester, N. Y., in 1833. He studied under James Harris, an English landscape painter, and later under Cropsey and Hart, of New York. He came to California in 1853, residing in San Francisco and Martinez. He traveled extensively in Panama, Nicaragua and Peru, where he laid the foundation of his reputation as a painter of tropical scenery. One of his best known works is "Mount Diablo" in the rooms of the Society of Pioneers, San Francisco. He received a number of medals from various State and local organizations. Mr. Bush died in Oakland, Cal., in 1894.

Oedipus and Antigone

On discovery that he had been guilty of the double crime of parricide and incest, Oedipus in horror put out his eyes and exiled himself. Led by his daughter Antigone, he proceeds to the grove of the Furies at Colones, where, amid thunder-peals, he is removed from earth.

Advancing along a dreary and rocky road, Antigone, in a white garment almost completely covered by violet drapery, which veils without concealing her beautiful form, is putting aside the briars from her father's path with the wand in her right hand; her head is turned towards Oedipus, who on his daughter's left side and holding her hand, advances with bowed head and the slow, uncertain step of blindness. The dark red drapery of Oedipus contrasts admirably with his silvery, flowing hair and beard.

Ulrich Von Hutten Seeking Shelter

Ulrich Von Hutten, born in Hesse Cassel, in the year 1488, was placed at the age of eleven in the monastery of Fulda, with the intention of his becoming a monk. When fifteen he ran away from the cloister to the University of Erfurt, where he joined the anti-monkish party. He subsequently became a great scholar and reformer. He died in Switzerland in 1523. No. 30 represents him seeking the refuge provided for him by Zwinglius, in the house of a clergyman named Schueegg, on the island of Ufuan, in the Lake of Zurich.

Banquet of Queen Joanna Near Naples

At a table, covered with a damask cloth, on which are flowers, wines and sweetmeats, ladies and cavaliers are seated in various attitudes, all more or less careless. In the foreground, to the right of the spectator, sits Queen Joanna, a fair woman, of beautiful form and feature. She is clothed in white satin; some drapery of gold brocade is thrown across her lap, which is full of flowers, and the tip of her dainty attired foot rests on a richly covered stool. Her head is turned towards the gentlemen on her left, Prince Louis of Taranto, who, with his right hand on his heart, is evidently making some tender protestation. Behind the chairs of the Queen and her favorite stand two Moorish boys, holding fans of peacock feathers. To the left, a youth and maiden, in the costume of the Italian peasantry, are executing a national dance to the music of bagpipe and flute. In the background attendants are bringing in fruit, and on the extreme right of the picture a musician, seated on a stone fence, and two lazzaroni are eagerly gazing upon the festive scene. Between the vine-wreathed pillars, at the back of the table, we have a view of Vesuvius, and the blue waters of the far-famed Bay of Naples.

Queen Joanna reigned from 1343 to 1382. She was a beautiful, but unprincipled woman, who caused the murder of her first husband in 1345, and was married three times afterwards. She was suffocated by command of her cousin and adopted son, Charles of Durazzo, who was proclaimed King of Naples in 1382.

But little is known of the private history of this able artist. He was of Flemish origin, and was born about the year 1600. He studied in the school of Rubens, but subsequently adopted the manner of Rembrandt, and so closely does he approach that master, that many works attributed to Rembrandt, doubtless owe their paternity to Jan Victor, and only a duly qualified connoisseur can discriminate between the two. Victor, or as he sometimes signed his pictures, Fictoor, usually chose his subjects from the Old Testament. He died about 1670.

San Francisco

Thomas Hill was born in Birmingham, England, in 1829. His family came to America in 1840, and settled at Taunton, Mass. He early showed artistic talent, his first important work being painted in Philadelphia in 1853, at which time he was a member of the old Graphic Club and also of the Academy, studying in the life class, of which Rothermel was President. In 1853, he took his first medal at the Maryland Institute, Baltimore. In 1861, he came to California for the benefit of his health. Opening a studio in San Francisco, he took the first prize of the Art Union for his "Trial Scene in the Merchant of Venice." He went to Paris in 1866, and studied with Paul Meyerheim, after which he devoted himself almost exclusively to landscape. Taking up his residence in Boston in 1867, he painted several notable pictures, amongst others "The Yosemite Valley" and "White Mountain Notch." Ill health compelled him to return to California, where he was soon able to resume the successful career began in the East. At the Centennial Exposition, Philadelphia, 1876, he was awarded the first medal for landscape painting, the subjects being "Donner Lake" and "Yosemite Valley" which are now in the gallery of the Leland Stanford, Jr., University. Another of his best works, "The Great Canon of the Sierras," is in the Crocker Gallery (No. 56). This picture gained the New York Palette Club medal. In addition to these honors, Mr. Hill has received a number of other medals.

In this picture the connoisseur recognizes at a glance the master hand of Murillo. The squalid attire and surroundings of the weird, witch-like creature, the attendant ape, fit companion for a being who appears scarcely human in her repulsive hideousness, are portrayed with wonderful art and expression, and reveal the touch of him, in whom "all the glories of Spanish art were united, as it were, into one focus." Murillo, like Rubens, the only master of his age that can be compared with him in talent, "possessed an almost incredible fertility, a widely extended reputation, and most amiable qualities."

Bartholome Esteban Murillo was born at the little town of Pilas, near Seville, in 1618, and died in 1685.

 The Anabaptists

In front of his dwelling, in Munster, Johann von Leyden is baptizing the daughter of his prophet, Dusentschuer, whom he afterwards married. On his left stand his co-regents: Rollman, the priest, holding the book, "de libertate Christiana," under his arm, and Knipperdolling, in executioner's garb, with the sword. Behind these appear two of his twelve dukes, the co-regents of the world. In the foreground, a kneeling monk, seized with fanaticism, is pressing forward to the anabaptism. In obedience to the King's command, that all gold and silver is to be delivered up to him, a maiden is bringing her trinkets and valuables to lay at the sovereign's feet. Attired in her white baptismal robes, Dusentschuer's daughter, the picture of innocence and devotion, kneels before Johann, and receives upon her bowed head the water of anabaptism. The boy, holding the vessel of water, was a natural son of the Bishop of Munster, and in his captivity served as page to the King. His garments are blue and brown, to typify that his King is Lord of Heaven and Earth. Behind the maiden kneels Dusentschuer, the second John the Baptist. Instead of a sheepskin, a wolfskin covers his shoulders, and on his banner is inscribed the sanguinary motto of the Anabaptists: "dat Wort is Flesch worden." By his side appears Hilla, the new Judith, in a state of ecstasy. Behind her follow groups of the people, representing Stupidity, Remorse, Indolence, and Anguish of Mind. Armed men mingle in the crowd, for the protection of the newly established Zion. Albot, Burgomaster of Munster, and his wife, both heartily grieved at the new regime of the fanatics, are seen at the window immediately overlooking this scene. The Ludgheri Church is visible in the background, but as if to carry out the words of Scripture, that whatsoever exalteth itself shall be humbled, its spire is broken. Pictures and books are being burned in the square in front of the church, for New Zion has her King and her Prophets.

The above description of the painting—"The Anabaptists" was written by the poet Julius Mosen.

(From Ariosto's "Orlando Furioso")

Peter Van der Werf was born in the vicinity of Rotterdam in 1665. A pupil of his elder brother, Adrian, he copied the latter's works in the same tone of coloring and delicate manner of penciling. In painting from his own designs he imitated his brother so closely that his pictures have sometimes passed for Adrian's works, although they are inferior to them. He died in 1718.

94 Nahl, Chas. C. San Francisco

The Love Chase

It was customary with the Arabs, when a young man wooed the daughter of a Sheik, that the father should give his best horse to the maiden, and another to her suitor. If the girl was favorably disposed toward the intended bridegroom, she would rein in her steed, thus giving him an opportunity of overtaking her; if, on the contrary, she disliked him, she urged her horse to its utmost speed. This picture represents a fair lady, evidently extremely willing to be captured, and giving her lover every possible opportunity of winning the prize. In the background are seated the respective fathers of the young couple, while, according to Arab custom, a camel stands ready to carry home the bride.

101 Van de Velde, Adrian Dutch School
Cattle Piece

Adrian Van de Velde was born at Amsterdam in 1639. "He was a scholar of Jan Wynants, and ranks almost as high as Paul Potter; for if inferior to him in the energy of conception displayed in his cattle, in plastic modelling and breadth of solid execution, he excels him in variety of subject, in taste for composition, delicacy of drawing, and in a certain warmth and sweetness of feeling." He has, however, this in common with Paul Potter—that he was a distinguished artist by the age of fourteen, and that he died young, namely, at the age of thirty-two.

Luc Jacobez, called Lucas van Leyden, may justly be considered the Patriarch of the Dutch School. Born at Leyden in 1494, "he followed that realistic tendency, in the treatment of sacred subjects, which Huber van Eyck had so grandly tracked, and lowered it greatly from its previous elevation. His heads, for instance, are generally of a very ugly character; at the same time, his form of art found sympathy in the feeling of the period." He died in 1533.

Michel Angelo Amerighi, surnamed Caravaggio, was born at Milan in 1569, and died in 1609. He has made himself famous for the impressive truth of his productions, and his pictures may to a certain extent, be regarded as typical of his life, portraying, as they do, more especially the passionate and gloomy emotions of the human heart.

Represents the well-known scene at Jacob's Well. Luke IV, v. 6-26. A scholar at Fontana and Tintoretto, Ludovico Carracci became the founder of the most important of the Eclectic Schools at Bologna. His style has been considered by several of the best judges of the art, as that which approaches nearest perfection. He was born at Bologna in 1555, and died in 1619.

It is ascertained that this great genius, and "model of all supernatural grace," never visited Rome—never even saw the works of other great masters, except Raphael's "St. Cecilia," when it was brought to Bologna. After long gazing upon it with breathless admiration, he exclaimed: "Anch io sono pittore!" (I also am a painter!) Correggio's death occurred in the year 1534, at the early age of forty-one. Like Raphael, he died in the prime of life.

Peter Paul Rubens, the illustrious head of the Flemish school, the "consummate painter, enlightened scholar, skillful diplomatist and accomplished man of the world," was born at Cologne in 1577, on the Feast of St. Peter and St. Paul, from which circumstance he received his name. On reaching his twenty-third year, he went by advice of his friend and master, Otto Venius, to Italy, where he spent eight years. On his return he established himself at Antwerp, from where he went at different times to the Courts of France and Spain. Among his numerous magnificent paintings, the one by which he is most extensively known, is probably his famous "Descent from the Cross," which presents the highest excellence attained by the master in ecclesiastical art. Rubens died at Antwerp May, 1640.

Roelas, where he soon acquired a considerable reputation. In 1650 he was sent for by King Philip to paint the Labors of Hercules, in the palace of Buenretiro. During the progress of the work, he was often visited by his royal patron, who on one occasion was pleased to express his admiration by laying his hand upon the artist's shoulder, and calling him "painter of the king, and king of painters." Zurbaran was of the naturalist school in light and shade and color, and is called the Spanish Caravaggio; he made a special study of draperies, which are invariably well managed in his pictures. He died at Madrid in 1662.

Eustache Le Sueur, the son of an obscure sculptor, was born at Paris in 1617. "His style exhibits little of the character of his country, and the simplicity of his compositions and the poetry of his design procured him the honorable title of the French Raffaele. * * * His compositions are noble and elevated, and there is a naivete in the air of his heads, and in his attitudes, which is extremely interesting; his draperies are simply and grandly cast, and though his coloring is without vigor or force, it is tender and delicate, and well adapted to the particular character of his works." - John Wynants, born at Harlem in 1600, is esteemed one of the most distinguished landscape painters of his time, and the academy which he established has produced many of the ablest artists of the Dutch School. Little is known of his life, "his works, like those of Philip Wouwerman, must form his history." His pictures, which are very valuable and of which he painted a large number, are to be found among all the best collections. He died in 1670.

Sketch

This eminent landscape painter was born at Harlem about the year 1636. It is not known under whom he studied, but it is probable that he was for some time the pupil of his friend and fellow townsman Nicholas Berghem. Ruysdael's pictures are held in the highest estimation, and are found in the choicest collections. He died at Harlem in 1681.

Ecce Homo

This illustrious artist was born in the Val d'Arno in 1452, and evinced even in childhood a decided taste for the fine arts. Placed by his father under the guidance of Andrea Verrochio, he soon eclipsed that master, and his talents rapidly attracted the attention of the Florentine public. Leonardo's studies had not been confined to painting; he was an able sculptor and architect and an accomplished poet and musician. Joined to such vigor of intellect, was an elegance of figure and grace of manner which made him beloved by all, and soon spread his fame through Italy. His most famous work is his "Last Supper," painted for the refectory of the Dominican Convent of S. Maria delle Grazie at Milan, "a performance which history ranks amongst the most admirable productions of the art." Leonardo da Vinci expired at Fontainebleau on the 2d of May, 1519, aged 67 years.

Gaspar Dughet was born at Rome in 1613. On his sister's marriage with Nicolo Poussin, Gaspar acquired the patronymic of his brother-in-law, under whose tuition he became an eminent and almost unsurpassed landscape painter. His pictures principally represent the most enchanting views in the vicinity of Rome, Tivoli and Frascati, but he has also composed many ideal landscapes. He died at Rome in 1675.

Guido Reni, the greatest of the scholars of the Caracci, was born at Bologna, in 1575. "His earlier pictures display a striving after the grand and terrible, with a powerful effect of light and shadow, similar to that observed in the works of Caravaggio; but his later style, by which he is best known, is remarkable for its sweetness and tenderness. His heads show the influence of a careful study of the antique." Guido died in 1642.

Young Ryckaert soon rose to distinction and enjoyed the special favor of Archduke Leopold, who appointed him in 1651 Director of the Academy at Antwerp. He usually painted peasant festivities, musical parties or the interiors of chemists' laboratories. David Ryckaert's pictures are not often met with out of Belgium, where they are to be found in the best collections. He died in 1677.

455 Lely, Sir Peter

German School

Portrait

This eminent portrait painter was born in Westphalia in 1617. On the death of Van Dyck in 1640, he determined to visit England, where he soon acquired high favor and distinction. Through William, Prince of Orange, he was introduced to the notice of Charles I., whose portrait he painted, as well as those of the Prince and Princess of Orange. Through all the tragical events that followed, Sir Peter Lely remained in England, his fame unimpaired. Cromwell sat to him, and after the Restoration, he had the honor of painting King Charles II., by whom he was knighted. Sir Peter died in 1680 and was buried in Covent Garden, where a monument with his bust, by Gibbon, is erected to his memory.

Domenico Zampieri, called Il Domenichino, was born at Bologna, in 1581. He was a fellow student of Guido and Albano in the Academy of the Caracci, where he soon distinguished himself greatly. Together with Albano, he afterwards visited Parma, Modena and Reggio, to study the works of Correggio and Parmegiano; and on their return they both finally settled in Rome. Domenichino's Communion of St. Jerome, painted for the principal altar of S. Girolamo della Carita, was considered the finest picture at Rome, after the Transfiguration, by Raffaelle. He died in 1641.

467 Holbein, Hans German School

This distinguished painter, engraver and designer, is generally said to have been born at Basle in 1498, although according to others, he is a native of Augsburg. However this may be, young Holbein passed his youth in the former place. In 1526 he visited England, where he was received with the greatest kindness by Sir Thomas More, through whose influence he was introduced to the notice of King Henry VIII., who took him into great favor, and appointed him painter to the Court, with apartments in the palace and a liberal salary. His works are very numerous; the greatest and best are in England, where he executed them. He died of the plague in London in 1554.

Andreas Achenbach was born at Hesse Cassel in 1815. In 1827 he became a pupil of Sehirmir, the Professor of Landscape at the Dusseldorf Academy, and acquired in a few years a high rank as an architectural landscape painter. "A coasting voyage which he made with his father in 1832 and 1833, by way of Rotterdam, Scheveningen and Amsterdam, to Hamburg, and thence to Riga, opened new fields for the exercise of his pencil in the grand wildness and magnificent surging of the Northern Sea, his acquaintance with which he two years afterwards matured and extended by an expedition to Denmark, Norway and Sweden." He subsequently traveled in the Tyrol, and in 1843 went to Italy, where he remained two years. "His pictures are characterized by the charm of never ending variety, grand mountain passes and lovely home idylls, the solitary fiord, forest lands, waterfalls and marine views with shipping, all seem under diverse aspects of season—some by day, others by moonlight. To sum up, the tendency of Achenbach's genius is realistic in the highest and best sense of the word." Foremost among his scholars are his brother Oswald and A. Flamm-Andreas Achenbach obtained the great gold medals of Belgium and Prussia, and the small one of France. He is also Knight of the Belgium Order of Leopold, and a member of the Academies of Berlin, Amsterdam and Antwerp. Died 1905.

535 Ponte, Giacomo Da (Bassano)Dance of Cupids

Giacomo da Ponte, usually called Il Bassano, was born at Bassano in 1510. He first studied under his father, Francesco, who was the founder of a school bearing his name; and later, in Venice, under Bonifagio Veneziani. He is supposed by some to have been a pupil of Titian, but this is doubtful, although at one time he was a close follower of that master's style. After acquiring considerable celebrity in Venice, his father's death compelled him to return to Bassano, where he spent the remainder of his life. He painted historical subjects as well as landscapes and portraits, and executed a marvelous number of pictures. Among his greatest works may be mentioned the Entombing of Christ, in the Seminario of Padua; the Nativity, now in the Louvre; and his Sacrifice of Noah, in the Santa Maria Maggiore at Venice, which latter was so much admired by Titian that he desired to have a copy of it for his own studio. Although the works of Bassano are not exempt from defects, and although they have been severely criticised, it is certain that they met with the highest praise from Titian, Paul Veronese (who intrusted to him the instruction of his son), Tintoretto, and Annibale Caracci, who is said to have been so deceived by a book which Bassano had painted upon a table, that he reached out his hand to take it up. Bassano had many pupils, and educated four of his sons to his profession. He died in 1592.

Pieter de Wit, or Witte, called Pietro Candido, a painter, sculptor and architect, was born at Bruges in 1548. After studying in his native city he went to Italy, where he formed an intimacy with Giorgio Vasari, whom he assisted in his works at the Vatican. From Italy he repaired, at the invitation of Maximilian I., Elector of Bavaria, to Munich, where he spent the remainder of his life. Under the arcade of the Long Gallery of the Hofgarten, in that city, he painted a series of frescos, representing the deeds of Otto von Wittelsbach, and the Departure of the Emperor Ludwig from Rome in 1327. Although these paintings are now defaced, the designs are preserved in the tapestries worked from them, and in the prints engraved from the tapestries by Amling. The exact date of De Witte's death is not known, but it probably occurred about 1620.

On proceeding to Italy, he was, however, strongly influenced by the pictures of Peter van Laer (called Bamboccio), and attaching himself to the style of that master, he painted similar subjects with great success. He executed landscapes, chiefly of Italian character, enlivened with sheep and goats, "which are touched with a precision and beauty of pencil that has hardly seemed surpassed." Van der Does is said to have been of a gloomy, morose and fretful temperament, and his works seem to partake of the gloominess of his character. He died at The Hague in 1673.

David Teniers, the Elder, was born at Antwerp in 1582, and was educated in the school of Rubens, who esteemed him highly for his promising talents. He devoted himself for some time to historical painting, and visited Italy for the purpose of studying the works of the most celebrated Italian masters; but finding that his genius led him rather to landscape, he placed himself at Rome, under the tuition of Adam Elsheimer, with whom he remained six years. On returning to Flanders he adopted, however, a style of his own, which he practiced with the utmost success. He painted cabinet pictures of merry-makings, rural sports, fairs, festivals, etc., which he treated with much humor and ingenuity. "His works would have been considered among the happiest efforts of the art in that particular branch had they not been so much surpassed by the inimitable productions of his son." He died in 1649.

HISTORY OF THE GALLERY

Judge E. B. and Mrs. Margaret E. Crocker erected in the City of Sacramento, California, the E. B. Crocker Art Gallery 1870-1873 to gratify their tastes. They gathered most of the Art collection during their travels in Europe. The large collection of studies, drawings, etc., kept in portfolios and lockers, were secured from studios and collectors in Europe during the Franco-Prussian War.

In 1884 the California Museum Association was formed to gather a museum of art, natural history mineral examples, etc., and to study matters related to the development of the resources of California.

To aid in securing a hall for its purposes, it gave an Art Loan Exhibition in the Art Gallery by the kindness of Mrs. Margaret E. Crocker, widow of Judge E. B. Crocker. It was so successful that in its midst Mrs. Crocker donated to the Association the Building and all its contents. By the request of the Association Mrs. Crocker changed the gift so that it could be received by the City of Sacramento with the California Museum Association as a co-tenant and administrator. The city accepted the trust and the two bodies have ever since controlled the property jointly.

In honor of the donor of the Gallery the people shortly after the making of the deed, gave her a reception in the great Agricultural Pavilion, which for floral beauty, unanimity of participation and splendor of ceremony, has never been surpassed in the State. People and societies from all over the State participated and contributed to the features of the floral festival. An account of all this with paintings by California artists was bound in a unique volume of gold and Sutter Fort Oak, and with another volume bound in silver and oak containing newspaper comments on the gift and festival, presented to Mrs. Crocker.

The original gift included 160 feet on O Street, by 160 on Second Street. A few years later and shortly prior to her death, Mrs. Crocker gave an additional strip on the east marked by the west line of the residence property next to the gallery.

The fine collection of minerals in the gallery is the property of the State of California.
